Dave worked in a factory, and he always made sandwiches in the morning, took them to work and ate them at midday.

Then he married, so he thought, 'now my wife's going to make my sandwiches.'

Who made Dave's sandwiches before he married?

Dave always made sandwiches.

Who made them after he married?

His wife made them after he married.

On the first day, she made him some, and when he got home in the evening, she said to him, 'were the sandwiches all right?' 'Oh, yes,' he answered, 'but you only gave me two slices of bread.'

On the first day, she made him some, and when he got home in the evening, she said to him, 'were the sandwiches all right?' 'Oh, yes,' he answered, 'but you only gave me two slices of bread.'

What did his wife say on the first evening?

She said 'were the sandwiches all right?'

What did Dave answer?

He answered 'Oh, yes, but you only gave me two slices of bread.'

The next day she gave him four slices, but he said again, 'four slices aren't enough.'

The third day she gave him eight slices, but those were not enough for him either.

The next day she gave him four slices, but he said again, 'four slices aren't enough.'

The third day she gave him eight slices, but those were not enough for him either.
